

Happy Bride. Happy Life.

We contacted Rob on the recommendation of my sister-in-law who loved his work for their wedding. We told Rob we were having a Star Trek themed wedding and he was very open to work with our non-traditional requests. Rob exceeded our expectations by meeting us for a location walk-through prior to the wedding, and giving us the raw video and pictures before we even returned home from our honeymoon. We were very happy, and will recommend Rob to any friends having a wedding in the future.

It is completely natural for the bride to feel at least a hint of nerves on her “big day,” after all; you are the star of the show.

Your photographer/ videographer plays a vital role; helping to ease those pre-wedding jitters and bring a sense of calm to your day. Early in my career, I learned that the happy brides are also the most photogenic.

In most cases, the photographer spends the entire day with the bridal party—from preparation in the morning to partying the night away, the photographer is capturing your memories. To get the best results, a good photographer builds a good rapport with everyone involved. I like to start things off with speaking light-heartedly with the bridal party, posing questions like; “do you think it will be the bride or the groom to shed the first tear during the ceremony?” or, “how did the bride and groom first meet?” Now the ice is broken and the room is filled with reminiscing and laughter that is all captured on film. Everyone is more relaxed with the camera, and the day ahead.

Though skill and experience contribute, it’s my relaxed approach that helps to capture the memories that will be treasured forever.

Rob Green, from Rio Productions was extremely professional, accommodating and a pleasure to work with. His keen eye for detail was extremely appreciated. He managed to capture the great moments and staged many other fun filled moments making our entire wedding party feel comfortable and relaxed. Rob safeguarded our memories of such a momentous day and for this we will always be grateful. -Laura Smile
